LESSONS FROM THE C-SUITE:

Strategic Dressing

DARA LAMB

Strategic dressing combines two of the most powerful concepts in brain science and communication:

How others perceive us
Visual Communication – Authenticity

How we perceive ourselves
Creating our own reality

JUNE 21, 2018

Dara's presentation on Strategic Dressing reveals what current brain science and behavioral research tells us about the lasting impact of image and how what we wear not only influences those around us, but can have a profound impact on ourselves; from increasing cognitive skills to helping achieve short and long term goals.

Why Your LinkedIn Headshot is So Important

Provided by Alyssa Gelbard

Your LinkedIn profile is a key part of your personal brand, whether you're networking to increase professional visibility or looking for a job. Networking on LinkedIn - and elsewhere - should be an ongoing activity, not only so you'll have a robust network when you need it, but also because it can drive business opportunities.

A good, professional-looking headshot is essential for increased visibility on LinkedIn (profiles with pictures get more 21X more views and 36X more messages than those without) and making a better impression on professional contacts and potential clients and employers. LinkedIn is a networking site, so people want to see who you are. Omitting a headshot makes it harder for someone to identify you online after meeting in person. Similarly, posting a poor headshot (e.g., cropped group shot, dated picture of you, selfie) is like making a poor introduction of yourself. Just as you want to put your best foot forward walking into a networking event, put your best face forward -- literally -- on LinkedIn.
